Render Wrangling Technician
Animal Logic Vancouver
Fixed-term Full-time
Start date: late January/ early February

Everything is awesome when you’re part of the team! Animal Logic - the studio that brought you The LEGO Movie - is looking for a Render Wrangling Technician to ensure render jobs within production are delivered in a timely and efficient manner while ensuring the render-queuing system (farm) is constantly monitored to help achieve efficient and trouble free rendering. This is an ideal job for a new to recent graduate with a passion for the Animation and VFX industry.

For the Render Wrangling Technician, a typical day might include the following:

- Monitoring production render queues and responding to identified errors/faults
- Managing production render resource allocations
- Working with artists and the Render Supervisor to diagnose production rendering problems
- Working with production to identify render farm priorities (shows, department, shots)
- Analysing and reporting system failures to IT

This job might be for you if:

You are self-motivated and driven. You have a strong capacity to learn and a deep commitment to your tasks.
You are technically savvy. You have a genuine interest in how things work. You’ve played around with 3D software and even wondered how the different pieces of a film are interconnected.
You are a problem solver. You are able to offer solutions and are not afraid to escalate or ask questions when required.
You are customer service oriented. You naturally know how to talk to others. You are able to keep calm in stressful situations and help others leave satisfied.

To land this opportunity, you will need to have experience in a technical support role. You will have a proven familiarity with most basic system artist tools and processes, networked/distributed computing concepts, and scripting languages (eg. Perl, Python). Through your experience you have developed excellent communication skills, have the ability to prioritize, and have proven to be a strong team player.
